Sail The High Alpine

a story of sailing at 6,000 feet in a landlocked state

Photos by Peter Lobozzo

“The moment we launched Juniper onto the crisp, dark water of Jackson Lake, our decision to buy a boat was validated.”

Winter melted into spring which transitioned into summer, and post-work evenings were spent restoring the boat. Dreams of sail-to-ski missions on Mount Moran had faded into hours of scrubbing dirt off the hull and learning to run rigging. The process was a never-ending series of trials and triumphs.

Juniper’s christening took place on a mid-summer day at the Signal Mountain Boat Launch. From that moment on, post-work evenings were spent sailing into the sunset through Grand Teton National Park. On weekends, we filled the boat with sleeping bags, floats and hotdogs, then sailed to remote island campsites with friends. One night, with Juniper beached beside us, we skipped rocks into the lake as the sun dipped below the Tetons, then cheered under a meteor shower as trails of light scarred the black sky.

The opportunities for sail-to-ski missions had come and gone, but if an adventure was what we sought, we’d already achieved that before hitting the water.
